BOSTON GLOBE SERIES OF ARTICLES ON POVERTY IN WESTERN MASSACHUSETTS

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, last week, the Boston Globe carried a superb series of articles on poverty in the rural towns of western Massachusetts. The series was entitled "Hidden Massachusetts" and it was written by two Globe reporters—David Armstrong and Ellen O'Brien. These two have done an excellent job portraying the impact of job loss on both individuals and communities. The towns in this area have been devastated by plant closings and layoffs. Factories and mills throughout the region have pulled out for warmer climates and cheap overseas labor. The jobs which remain are predominantly low paying. Salaries in the communities west of Worcester are dramatically lower than those in the remainder of the state. With this sense of economic hopelessness has come increased levels of crime, violence and abuse.

These articles are a poignant reminder that the rising economic tide has not lifted all boats. Similar stories could be told about impoverished communities in every one of our states. For those with limited education and outdated employment skills, the economic environment is growing increasingly hostile. The macro-economic numbers which describe a growing economy conceal a great deal of individual pain and dislocation. As a nation, we need to pay much more attention to the disturbing growth in income disparity. The working poor are becoming poorer, and the middle class are finding it tougher to maintain their living standard. We must provide these hard working men and women with the tools they need to succeed in the new economy. We must provide them with the opportunity to share in the prosperity.

I call these articles to your attention, and I ask unanimous consent that excerpts from them be printed in the RECORD, because their message is a national one. The problems faced by the people of western Massachusetts are the same problems which confront us all across America. We must make the American dream a reality for more of our citizens. These stories are an important reminder that we have not yet done so.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Boston Globe, Mar. 9, 1997]

HIDDEN MASSACHUSETTS

BEHIND THE SCENIC LANDSCAPES, ON THE BACK ROADS OF A RURAL MASSACHUSETTS, IS A WORLD OF POVERTY AND ABUSE, VIOLENCE AND DESPERATION

(By David Armstrong and Ellen O'Brien)

It's dim and stale in the basement lockup at district court, the sickly yellow walls echoing the tales of a thousand petty criminals who have sat here waiting to see the judge upstairs. There are two cells, each with heavy steel bars painted black. There are no windows.

In the far cell, on the edge of a wooden bench, sits a stocky, babyfaced 11-year-old with straight brown hair that's cut short. He stares at a concrete wall where someone has scratched the words "White Power." In the corner is a shiny, metal toilet welded to the wall.

He is Chevy Van Pickup—so named because his parents thought it sounded cool. He's here for allegedly mugging a woman outside a package store in Athol, a small town near the New Hampshire border where he lives.

Chevy already is the youngest child in the custody of the State Department of Youth Services, the agency that oversees the treatment and punishment of kids in trouble.

His rap sheet would be impressive if he were an adult, never mind a child a decade shy of the legal drinking age.

Athol police first picked him up when he was 5 years old (his mother can't remember what he did). When Chevy was 7 years old, the youngest age at which someone can be charged with a crime in Massachusetts, he was arrested four times—once for attacking another student with a trumpet.

Now confined to a facility for young criminals in Lancaster, Chevy spends his free time making cards for his grandfather and trying to earn good behavior points so he can buy presents for his sisters. For the first time, he is learning how to read.

On the rare occasions his mother visits, Chevy repeatedly asks for hugs and tells her how much he loves her.

Head west from Boston, past the pricey suburbs, beyond the bustle of Interstate 495, and you'll find some of the loveliest landscapes in New England.

But it's a cruelly deceiving portrait.

Behind the pastoral facade live some of the poorest, most violent, most abused, and desperate young people in the state. This is the hidden Massachusetts—the tragic, ugly underside of a state renowned for prestigious universities, famous hospitals, high incomes, and educated residents.

In many towns and small cities along Route 2, where tourists crowd maple sugar stands, assaults are more widespread than in Boston or Springfield.
